To simulate late El Greco's supposed lifelong astigmatism, a volunteer was persuaded to wear the El Greco telescope over one eye for 2 days, with her other eye covered. At night she was blindfolded. Four times a day, she drew both a copy of a square and also a freehand square. Her copied squares were perfectly square.

Domenikos Theotokopoulos, best known as El Greco (meaning "The Greek"), was called so because he was born in Crete. However, when he was born, Crete was part of the Republic of Venice, so in his twenties, El Greco traveled to Venice and studied with the great painter Titian, who was already well-known at that time.

Art Lesson Plan: El Greco: Drawing Tall People. Using a ruler, students draw lines to divide the photo at least 6-10 times, at the body joints at least. The face can be cut up around the eyes, around the nose, through the forehead. The idea is to "stretch" the person's body to make it look very tall and thin.
