It is far less widely understood that a much greater catastrophe took place at the end of the Permian period 251 million years ago: at least ninety percent of life on earth was destroyed. When Life Nearly Died documents not only what happened during this gigantic mass extinction but also the recent renewal of the idea of catastrophism: the theory that changes in the earth's crust were brought about suddenly in the past by phenomena that cannot be observed today.

When life nearly died My personal involvement in exploring the end-Permian mass extinction took me to Russia several times in the 1990s. Shortly after glasnost and perestroika we had the opportunity to mount expeditions to the Ural Mountains, the borderland between Europe and Asia, where some of the best Permian rocks are to be seen.
